Putting More People on the Path to Self-Sufficiency

Sara, like one out of every four Dallas County adults, lacks a high school diploma. She also speaks very little English. No matter how hard she works, she lacks the skills for a job that provides enough income to put food on the table and pay for a safe home for her children.

There are 3.8 million Texans who, like Sara, need Adult Education services, but only 100,000 are served statewide. Thanks to your support, Wilkinson Center has doubled the size of its adult education program to put working-poor families on the path to self-sufficiency.

More than half of Wilkinson Center students take classes at our new Arcadia Park Annex location in Southwest Dallas. Hundreds of students fill Wilkinson Center classrooms morning, noon and night to learn English, work on High School Equivalency diplomas and gain computer skills. And, students take community college classes on site, including a BOSS certification course to prepare for business and administrative jobs. Equipped with these skills, students can transition to college-level courses, employment and jobs that improve their standard of living.

Wilkinson Center and Dallas County Community College partner at Arcadia Park Annex in Southwest Dallas – a joint effort on behalf of Texas Workforce Commission.

Adult Education at Wilkinson Center

Why It Works

We all understand wanting to care for one's family and striving to get ahead in life. Maybe you've even gone back to school to build skills for a better job.

But, imagine if you can't get to class because you can't pay the bus fare or a babysitter to watch your kids. Or worse, you can't concentrate on your studies because you haven't had a full meal today or are worried about being behind on the rent again.

These are the realities that thousands of Dallas County working poor families live with every day. To successfully address our city's overwhelming poverty issues, we must address the many barriers that stop people from achieving long-term success.

That's why, at Wilkinson Center, we use the Working Families Success Model – a proven approach of bundling services essential to achieve and sustain financial and career goals.

“The goal is to help families not only achieve stability but to ultimately thrive financially. Financially stable families invest in our communities, building a strong future for all.”

Wende Burton, Communities Foundation of Texas

To help people rise above poverty, Wilkinson Center addresses the complex, intertwined challenges they face.

Restoring Hope

How Monique is Building a New Future

When Monique moved to Dallas, she hoped to leave behind the anxieties of living in the troubled Heart of Chicago neighborhood. She longed to put her high school diploma to work and make a better life for herself and her son. But, she discovered the school she attended was not accredited. Without a high school diploma or livable income, she was soon homeless and swirling into a depression.

One day, she turned to Wilkinson Center's Food Pantry for assistance. She told our team about her struggles, and they connected her not only with food, but also with our GED program, a licensed counselor and other services to remove barriers in her way.

Equipped with these tools, Monique has been faithfully building a new life, earning her diploma in just five months and working steadily with a financial coach. She applied for and was awarded a scholarship to attend community college, and she is now pursuing her dream of being a surgical technician.

On May 9, Wilkinson Center recognized Monique for her grit and determination at the annual Can Do! Luncheon.

Ashlee & Chris Kleinert

This big-hearted couple energetically supports a range of worthy causes in Dallas, including education, community health, victims of human trafficking, and women and girls. They can be found heading major campaigns, chairing boards and delivering “Random Snacks of Kindness” through Ruthie’s Rolling Cafe – Ashlee’s gourmet grilled cheese food truck business with a charitable bent.

Known for their philanthropic ingenuity, the Kleinerts founded Executives in Action (EIA) in response to the 2008 financial crisis. EIA put executives who were between jobs to work providing much-needed, pro-bono consulting to nonprofits in short-term, high-impact projects. Wilkinson Center benefited from one of these valuable engagements in 2016 as EIA expanded its reach and merged with the national skills-based volunteer platform Catchafire.org. EIA has advanced missions throughout the North Texas nonprofit community, impacting more than 275 nonprofits with over $5.2 million in human resource capital.

FOUNDATION

The Real Estate Council

The Real Estate Council's 2,000-plus members are developers, builders, brokers, architects and other commercial real estate professionals. But they are also dedicated community servants who wield their influence, resources and expertise to do good works in four areas: education, housing, job creation and the environment.

Since 1994, TREC has contributed nearly $10 million in grant funds to more than 100 nonprofit community organizations, supported by professional services valued at more than $750,000 annually. TREC's imprint can be found on community initiatives as broad-ranging as early learning centers, emergency shelters, food pantries and community legal clinics – as well as Wilkinson Center's GED Testing Center, which opened in 2016 thanks to support from TREC.

Born from Compassion

Wilkinson Center Celebrates 35 Years

Pathways to self-sufficiency. This has been at the core of Wilkinson Center's mission since it was founded in 1982 at Munger Place United Methodist Church. Fellow East Dallas neighbors were going hungry right in the church's backyard, and, in response, the Food Pantry was born.

Today Wilkinson Center is an independent nonprofit, and we are still feeding our neighbors, now in locations across Dallas. Thanks to the caring and generous support of people like you, we have significantly expanded our services to help families build pathways out of poverty for good, using a formula of Food+Education+Jobs. In addition to Emergency Services like food and rent assistance, we also provide life-changing Adult Education, Employment and Financial Coaching services.

Our greatest hope would be to someday work ourselves out of a job. But, as Mayor Rawlings has said, "Dallas is the poorest rich city in the United States," with poverty growing and spreading into surrounding suburbs. With your help, Wilkinson Center will be here for the long haul to take that problem head on, with compassion, one family at a time.

Volunteer of the Year: Michael Graska

Michael with his wife, Kristen Graska, who is Co-Chair for the Young Friends of Wilkinson Center

Volunteering at Wilkinson Center takes many forms – GED tutors, Food Pantry assistants, event committee members and more. But, at Wilkinson Center, there is only one Michael Graska.

For the last six years, Michael has served as Communications Chair, spending countless hours helping Wilkinson Center spread the word about its mission. He generously designs and codes, and his company hosts, the Wilkinson Center website on a pro bono basis. In addition, he helps with various collateral materials and faithfully supports Young Friends of Wilkinson Center events. We appreciate his sincere caring and devotion to the Wilkinson Center mission and his valuable professional skills!
